Fort Wright resident Lori Wall wants you to learn how to speak Spanish on the go.

Wall's business, which focuses on teaching conversational Spanish to private individuals and employees of local companies, is appropriately dubbed "Spanish on the Fly" because "you can do this in your spare time on the fly," she said.

This year is Spanish on the Fly's fifth anniversary, something Wall, a former Spanish teacher, is proud of.

"It is so enriching to know a second language," she said. "Many of the Hispanics who are here are learning English, but this way you can bridge the gap between their knowledge of English and your knowledge of Spanish."

Wall holds 12-hour classes for pri-

Spanish on the Fly owner Lori Wall is celebrating her business's fifth anniversary this year. The former Spanish teacher specializes in teaching both private individuals and company employees conversational Spanish.

vate individuals at locations in Florence, Fort Mitchell and Hyde Park and teaches the same class on-site at any business. In the past, she has worked with hospitals, production facilities, technology companies, real estate and more.

"It's for communication, not for conjugation," Wall said of her approach, which focuses more on questions and answers rather than the grammar of Spanish. "It's for practical use."

However, in addition to her beginner conversation Spanish classes, Wall also teaches intermediate and advanced-level classes that focus on the more traditional approach of becoming fluent in a language.

"It's been great to see the amount of conversational Spanish they can pick up in a short amount of time," Wall said.
